How do you feel when you are facing a challenging problem in math? I keep specific responses private, so I create word clouds like the ones below to engage the class in a discussion about their mindset. At the end of the year, I ask students for a final reflection. This year, I asked the following question in GrokSpot Reflections also give students a chance to practice making and acting upon growth mindset comments. I worked with one particular student a few years ago who wanted to improve his quiz and test scores. Because of this, I am working on interweaving the teaching of study strategies into my classes and reminding students to look back at their reflections when studying. GrokSpot enables me to ask students to gauge their confidence level, which is seen only by me.
