I Have No Home But Me explores themes of home and duality through personal narratives embedded in my paintings and artists' books. A duality that exists within a body does not necessarily exist as a pair of oppositions. The pair can also be complementary to each other, or live at the same time as coexistence. This paper examines how the idea of duality threads its way through the key themes in my studio practice: painting and colour theory; ambiguity and disconnection created by minimalistic work; and the concept of home and identity. These themes—ambiguity, formal structure, and home—coincide with my personal narrative, which is also present. Examples of artworks by Agnes Barley, Gustav Klimt, and Agnes Martin are discussed in relation to these themes with a focus on architecture and memory, the window as a dualistic spatial device, and how grids influence the physical and mental states of the human body.

URI
http://hdl.handle.net/10012/15876
They are both correct in the US, but neither one sounds like something a person in the US would actually say. (Unless they might possibly be used in the deep south—someone from the south needs to chime in.) I think they might be used in the UK, b... Someone could say “I have plenty of money” at the outset of an evening, but have no cash, and be referring only to the fact that he or she has plenty of money in the bank, and is carrying a debit card. If you say “I have no money with/on me,” you may leave your listener in a bit of doubt as to whether you have any ability to pay. Do you mean you have no cash and are carrying only plastic? Or are you broke until Friday? Or did you forget your wallet? I have no enemies...only friends. We all live in the 21st century. I can say that I know my home town fairly well. They want to travel to Great Britain and some other places. He is not a child but he still likes ice cream. This is my home and I must defend it. My brother says he would like to become an architect. +50 pts. Answered. Riddle: I have keys but no doors. I have space but no rooms, I allow you to enter but you are never able to leave. What am I? 2. See answers. Riddle: I have keys but no doors. I have space but no rooms, I allow you to enter but you are never able to leave. What am I? Simple, the one thing you type out your words in a computer or a mobile phone! Answer: A keyboard! xBrainlyx xBrainlyx. I have keys but no doors. I have space but no rooms, I allow you to enter but you are never able to leave. What am I? => A Keyboard. Still have questions? Ask your question. Find more answers. Still have questions? Find more answers. Ask your question.