

PROGRESS OF HIGHER EDUCATION IN COLONIAL BENGAL AND AFTER - A CASE STUDY OF RAJSHAHI COLLEGE
(1873-1973)

Thesis Submitted to the University of North Bengal, Darjeeling, India, for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy in History.

001051

By

Md. Monzur Kadir

Assistant Professor of Islamic History
Rajshahi College, Rajshahi, Bangladesh.

Under the Supervision of

Dr. I. Sarkar

Reader in History

University of North Bengal,
Darjeeling, West Bengal, India.

November, 2004.

STOCK TAKING-2011 |

Ref.
378.549240904
KHP

179138

13 DEC 2005

During the war and sometime after, education came to a complete stop The South had to start over 5 million whites and 4 million freed slaves By 1876 little progress had been made Carnegie Libraries - Funds for public libraries Teachers were paid very poorly. Evolution of American High Schools.Â Established that HS was the natural link to elementary schools and colleges therefore HS can be paid for by the state since states were already paying for elementary and junior high Paying Taxes eliminated "rich only" Leads to accreditations Carnegie Unit = 1hr/day for 5 days per course. Oregon Case - 1925.Â This changed everything in higher education b/c the govt. wanted to assimilate 2.5 million servicemen into higher ed. and the workforce. Brown vs Board of Education - 1954. View Colonial Education Research Papers on Academia.edu for free.Â The chapter pursues how notions of progress have traveled into schooling through technology and generate differences and exclusions in the past and present. The chapter explores how transnational school reforms during the colonial era were directed to adapting education to "the African," which connected expertise in the U.S., UK, and Africa through a shared set of standards, principles, and values about what constituted civilization and development. In school reforms today, the "African" has disappeared today in favor of the "all"; however, residues of educational values and judgments that made up the African as a peculiar and pathological target of ...