Tiivistelmä:	This paper reviews the forgotten history of the museum of the Israel Department of Antiquities and Museums (hereafter IDAM) in Jerusalem, which until 1965 was the central archaeological museum of the State of Israel. From its humble beginnings with a small temporary exhibition in 1949, the creators of this museum gathered together a large and important collection of antiquities. These founders hoped to create the cornerstone for the future new central museum of Israel. However, the State entrusted the general manager of the Prime Minister's office, Tedi Kollek with the establishment of this new museum. In 1962, Avraham Biran, who worked closely with Kollek, was appointed director of IDAM. Biran eventually transferred the treasures of the IDAM to the new Bronfman Museum, the archaeological section of the Israel Museum.

EXHIBITIONS. Established in 1965, Israel's largest cultural institution is also ranked among the world's leading art and archaeology museums. In addition, it features a large collection of paintings representing a wide range of periods, styles, subjects and regions. Painters in the collection include such international figures as Rembrandt, Marc Chagall and Camille Pissarro, as well as Israeli and Jewish artists including Abel Pann and Reuven Rubin. The Israel Museum also operates two off-site locations: the Rockefeller Archaeological Museum, an architectural gem built in 1938 to display archaeology f
