

John Wesley's Reading: Evidence in the Kingswood School Archives

Randy L. Maddox

In the previous issue I detailed the list of books in the Kingswood School library recorded by Cornelius Bayley around 1775, and noted that Wesley helped procure most of these books. Indeed, Wesley appears to have donated much of his personal library to Kingswood. How do we know this? Because of Wesley's signature on the flyleaf, or other markings in his hand, in many of the books that remain today in the Kingswood School archives from that initial collection.¹

It is a matter of great regret that only about one third of the books on Bayley's list remain at Kingswood (now in the Wesley Centre archives). There is a tradition that two cartloads of books were lost during the move of the school from Bristol to Bath in 1851. Whether this is true or not, it is significant that at Bath the books were placed in an open reading room and remained there until at least 1936. This means they were quite accessible to visitors through the celebration of the centennial of Wesley's death in 1891 and the bicentennial of his birth in 1903. These anniversaries created great interest in collecting Wesley memorabilia, and the Kingswood collection felt the impact. Several of the books that remain have the corner of the fly leaf where Wesley's signature likely was present cut or torn off. And there is little doubt that other signed volumes simply disappeared. In 1937—likely as he was preparing for the upcoming bicentennial of Aldersgate—W. G. Ingram, the librarian at Kingswood, sensed the magnitude of this loss. He published two letters in the Times Literary Supplement pleading for anyone with knowledge of the missing volumes to assist in their return.² There is little evidence that Ingram's plea yielded fruit, but the remaining books were apparently placed in a more secure area. Their security was further upgraded in 1988 with the creation of the Wesley Centre at Kingswood.

As should be expected, a number of the books now in the archives of the Wesley Centre are early editions of Wesley's own publications. Frank Baker provides reference to these in his catalogue of extant copies of Wesley's works.³ The following list will be limited to books present in the collection by writers other than Wesley, with a particular interest in evidence that Wesley was personally aware of the book. I begin with those titles present ¹I would acknowledge again my debt to David Brown, Director of the Wesley Centre at Kingswood School, for providing me an initial list of holdings in the Centre and then hosting my visit to peruse the collection, in order to determine which books might be traced back to Wesley. Mr. Brown and Gary Best, current Head Master of Kingswood, also provided some of the background on the collection summarized in the following paragraph.

²See Times Literary Supplement (14 August 1937): 592; (18 September 1937): 675.

that were contained in Bayley's 1775 catalogue. Since the publication of this catalogue in the previous issue marked (with an asterisk) every volume still present, I include below only those volumes by other writers with contain some evidence of direct connection to Wesley (almost two-thirds of the relevant titles!). Next I list other volumes in the collection, not on Bayley's list, that evidence direct connection to Wesley. Then I turn to volumes in the collection which lack direct evidence (such as a signature), but which we know by other means were known to Wesley. Finally I list any remaining volumes which may have been known to Wesley, but for which the only evidence I have found so far is their presence in this collection.

In the first two sections, bold material within quotation marks is in Wesley's handwriting. The authenticity of each inscription was supported by Frank Baker in notes he took on each book, and I have verified their continuing presence.⁴ In the third section I typically list only one external reference for evidence of Wesley's knowledge of each book. Abbreviations of published sources are standard.⁵ Manuscript sources are all found in the Coleman Collection of the Methodist Archives at the John Rylands Library, Manchester. Besides Wesley's "Oxford Diary," these include a list of readings he assigned his students in the years 1730–31 (in Coleman VII) and an inventory of his library on Michaelmas 1731 (Coleman XVIII, pp. 114–17). I am indebted to Richard Heitzenrater for help in confirming Wesley's references to readings in the Oxford Diary.

Let me close with just one sample of the insights this list can provide to Wesley scholars. While all acknowledge that Wesley showed special interest in some patristic writers from the "Eastern" branch of Christianity, it has been unclear what interest or knowledge he had of more contemporary Eastern theologians. From this list we can show that Wesley owned and placed in the Kingswood collection two books by relatively contemporary Eastern writers (Mohyla and Meniates), in addition to a volume on the Greek Church listed in Bayley's catalogue that is no longer present.⁶

⁴Baker's notecards are now in the possession of Richard Heitzenrater, who kindly gave me access to them.

⁵*Works* refers to the Bicentennial edition, while Works (Jackson) is the earlier edition edited by Thomas Jackson. The other source is Minutes of the Methodist Conferences, from the First, held in London, by the Late Rev. John Wesley, A.M., in the Year 1744 (London: John Mason, 1862).

⁶Wesley probably owned Mohyla from 17 Jan. 1734, when the Oxford Diary records him reading the volume. The other book in Bayley's list is Thomas Smith (1638–1710). An Account of the Greek Church, as to its doctrine and rites of worship. London: Richard Davis, 1675. [102].

John Wesley was an eighteenth-century evangelist, writer and theologian who was a key figure in the establishment of Methodism... ~Jack Jackson, "Offering Christ: John Wesley's Evangelistic Vision" (Nashville: Kingswood, 2017), 40. John Wesley. 25 April at 10:06. A review, by Dr. Kevin Watson of Candler, of the new "Wesley One Volume Commentary" on the Bible. <https://kevinmwatson.com/wesley-one-volume-commentary/> I ordered the new Wesley One Volume Commentary from Cokesbury last week and was thrilled when it came in the mail. I remember a colleague mentioning working on commentary for one of the books for kevinmwatson.com. Wesley One Volume Commentary: First Impressions.

The Kingswood school for colliers'™ children, of which Whitefield had laid the foundation, and which Wesley had completed, was under a layman, ignorant but holy, called Cennick, who was devoted to Whitefield, and now embraced the stimulating doctrines of election and reprobation. In continual visits to Bristol, Wesley fought the heresy which at one time sadly depleted his own meetings. Cennick wrote orgulously to Whitefield: "œI sit solitary, like Eli, waiting what will become of the ark." Further, in Germany, neophytes had to prove themselves preachers before they could be ordained at all: and even in the English Church parish clerks often read prayers, witness "œthat singing man" at Christ Church who murdered with his excruciating chant every lesson he read. Who had ordained him? Jones argues that for Wesley, religious authority is constituted not by a "quadrilateral", but by a fivefold but unitary locus comprising Scripture, reason, Christian antiquity, the Church of England, and experience. He shows that in actual practice Wesley's reliance on the entire Christian tradition - in particular of the early church and of the Church of England - is far heavier than his stated conception of Scripture would seem to allow, and that Wesley stresses the interdependence of the five dimensions of religious authority for Christian faith and practice. Jones has given us a well thought out preentation of the scriptures in the life of John Wesley. This is a book well worth the reading to understand how the primacy of scriptures works out in the thinking of John Wesley. I liked it.
