How do I find a research position? There are several ways to find and apply to research opportunities. It’s best to use a variety of methods in your search. Contact professors doing research that interests you. Identify faculty members pursuing research projects in line with your interests. Find their contact information on their department webpages or in the Columbia directory. Send them a professional email, succinctly outlining your research interests and skills, and expressing your interest in serving as a research assistant. You can find additional resources on applications through Undergraduate Research and Fellowships, including through their events and advising resources. We’re here to help! Resources for Faculty. Start Here - Find OER: A great place to start your search is OPEN Open Professionals Education Network (http://open4us.org/find-oer/). Alphabetical List of OER for EDUCATORS. Academic Commons (http://www.academiccommons.org/). InTech as published more than 850 Open Access books, and provides support services for faculty who wish to publish a book or journal and make it available via Open Access. Lumen Learning (http://www.lumenlearning.com/). Lumen works with faculty around the country to review and aggregate the best OER from around the web, design these resources into Open Courses that match general education and other degree requirements, and posts these open course frameworks online. Concordia Libraries provide students, faculty, and staff with the information resources fundamental to learning and the pursuit of knowledge.
