Earthworms are miniature topsoil factories and numerous soil scientists have been equally fascinated by the amount of work done by them. Charles Darwin said of them: "It may be doubted whether there are many other animals which have played so important a part in the history of the world as these lowly organised creatures". Earthworms make soil and all other living things eventually pass through an earthworm, on the way to becoming soil! The earthworm life cycle, like many others, starts with an egg. Within the egg, a young earthworm develops until it is ready to hatch. The egg is encased in an egg casing called a cocoon. The number of eggs within one cocoon can vary between species, ranging between 1 and 20 from earthworm species in the family Lumbricidae (but most species have just 1).
